Wolverine Project Volunteer Survey

Thank you for taking part in the 2013 field season for the Idaho Panhandle wolverine study! Before we send crews into the backcountry, we'd like to learn about your skills and experiences. Our goal is to match you with monitoring stations that offer the best fit for your specific skill set and location and your desire for adventure. This information will also help us match you with other volunteers.

Monitoring Station Leaders will adopt a site as their responsibility for the duration of the season. Leaders will make two trips to their adopted site — one trip to set the station up and one to take it down at the end of the season. Leaders are required to work with at least one partner during all monitoring station activities. Leaders will also communicate with the project coordinator to obtain and drop off materials before and after station checks.

Volunteers who can't commit to being a Monitoring Station Leader but want to help with the wolverine project and get into the backcounty are urged to partner with leaders to assist in monitoring station activities.
